HOW CAPT. GRACE DIED. PANIC AND DEATH ON BOARD THE STEAMER AMERICA.

Storm for Forty-Two Hours - People Driven Insane by Fright-The Drende

NEW YORK, Oct. 25.—The death of Capt. Gracs of the steamer America, which was announced in these dispatches yesterday, is surrounded by a halo of heroism. The noble captain died from a congestive chill brought on by being exposed to a severe storm for forty-two hours. The story as taken from the log of the vessel is as follows:

The America left Queenstown on Thursday morning a week ago, with fair weather, but within two hours after leaving the harbor a storm came up, which the officers of the ship describe as the meet violent that the vessel ever passed through. Capt Grace went to the bridge at the first sign of bad weather and remained there for forty-two hours, exposed not only to the wind and rain but to the waves, which, during Thursday night, washed clear over the bridge, filling the lifeboats with water and clearing everything from the decks that the force of ten feet of water could move. In the midst of the storm a stoker, who had narrowly escaped being hurled into the fire by the pitching of the vessel, descrited his post and rushed up on deck with the avowed intention of jumping overbeard rather than risk again the danger of his work. He was forced buck to the furnace-room, but his fright soon developed into fusanity, and he was found croaching between two furnaces in abject terror, awaiting another opportunity to commit suicide. He was placed in in abject terror, awaiting another opportu-nity to commit suicide. He was placed in abscesses ever and around my neck and throat, continually exading an offensive mass of bloody matter disgusting to behold, and almost intolerable to endure. It is impossible almost intolerable to endure. It is impossible to fully describe my sufferings, as the case was complicated with Chronic Catarrh. After three years of misery, having been treated by three physicians, I was worse than ever. Finally, on the recommendation of W. J. Huntley, dringdist, of Lockport, I was induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. And now, after having taken twelve bottles, within the last twelve months, the experience manifests.

This statement is confirmed by W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, N. Y., who calls the ture a great victory for Hood's Sarsaparilla.

At the same time a panic was created in the steerage by the alarm of "Fire," and several hundred men and women rushed to the batches endeavoring to get to the beats. Dense volumes of what seemed to be smoke throughout the ship caused the alarm, and the officers in charge had a desperate fight for some time to control the frightenest steerage passengers. Investigation showed that the "smoke" was merely steam caused by some water having washed over hot steam-pipes.

But again fright had developed into a case of insanity, and one of the steerage passengers, an Englishman who had deserted his family and his position on an English police force, now attacked the stewards with a razor and threatened to kill any one who tried to prevent his jumping overboard. He was placed under watch after being disarrand and became quieter after the storm had subsided. A cook was everally injured during the storm by being everally injured during the storm by being after the storm had subsided. A cook was severely injured during the storm by being thrown across the kitchen with a knife in his hand, cutting his head. About noon on Sat-nulay Capt Grace left the bridge, the ship being entirely out of danger, but his forty-two hours' exposure without sleep, and the mervous strain caused by the chapter of inci-dents referred to, was too much for him. Five minutes after coming off duty the reac-tion developed into a congestive chill and at

On Sunday morning the insane Englishman succeeded in breaking away from his guards in the steerage, and, amid great excitement among the men, women and children who witnessed the struggle, he leaped overboard and was drowned. On Monday a baby died in the steerage and it was buried in the sea the next morning. The death of Capt. Grace caused deep grief among the cablin passengers, and at a general meeting in the saloon appropriate resolutions were adopted by them.
